

Present A One Day Workshop Recovery Conversations With Karen Taylor & Ron Coleman

Recovery conversations is a one day workshop that introduces participants to different ways of engaging in often difficult conversations with people having psychotic experiences. Rooted in a narrative approach of working and building on work carried out by Micheal & Cheryl White and Marius Romme & Sandra Escher, recovery conversations will introduce attendees to ways of both entering into and how to build on often fixed narratives that are keeping clients stuck in what Taylor and Coleman call the illness trap. Moving beyond the concept of illness to one of wellbeing is for Taylor and Coleman a process and it is this process that they will unpick during the workshop breaking it down to a series of interactive conversations and exercises that participants will be able to use after the day.

On the day participants will cover:

- How to support people who find it difficult to engage in the work of recovery
- How to support people who are unsure of what they want
- How to hold on to hope and support people that no one believes can recover
- How to work in a recovery way with people under involuntary treatment
- How to change the conversation and/or narrative.
